The explorer bees tell their sisters about direction and distance of flowers through definite movements which we can call dance'. A round dance suggests that the flowers are quite near The shume dance suggests that the bees should be ready for a long flight. Certain other movements are also used to indicate even the direction of the nectar source of howers.

Now let's look into their eyes, Bees have five eyes two compound ones and three simple ones. The surface of a compound eye of a worker bee has nearly 5000 hexagonal facets, whereas drones have about 8000. But surprisingly bees are poor in identifying colours. They can identity blue, yellow and white colours only
They cannot see the red colour at all!
